

I am strongly opposed to any legislation that would weaken New Jersey's Do Not Call law. As a full-time employee and mother of three, I have repeatedly been called by numerous telemarketers in the during the dinner hour and early in the morning on Saturdays and even on Sundays (the Sunday calls appear to originate from overseas telecommunications or mortgage bank contractors. This is disruptive of the limited time we have to spend together as a family, and invariably either my husband or I inform the callers that we are not interested in whatever it is they are promoting or selling. It should remain within the jurisdiction of each state to identify the preferences of its constituents with regard to this matter, and to have the legislators elected by the state serve the needs of the people who put them into office. In New Jersey, we are happy with the current Do Not Call law and do not wish to have it amended by the federal government in any way.
